

Dr. Ron Brown spent 27 years in higher education, with the last 23 in the areas of student development, athletic and academic administration and student affairs. He has garnered a national reputation as one of the preeminent authorities on learning support systems and programs serving populations ranging from college and university academic support programs to community-based educational and training agencies serving disadvantaged youth, families and adult learning initiatives. He spent 12 years as an Assistant to the Provost for Academic and Student Affairs & Assistant Athletic Director while also serving as the Director of the Academic Support Service for Student Athletes. Dr. Brown's program became a national "best practices" model for NCAA member institutions. He also served as a Peer Reviewer for the NCAA Institutional Certification program. His latest research and work has been on the African-American male in the areas of education and life skills development.